

ABSTRACT

A method for analyzing or designing a fluid extrusion device using a computer system involves inputting fluid rheological data and extrusion device data into a computer system having CFD numerical algorithms and a user interface; computing flow characteristics of the extrusion device; and extracting data relating to the flow characteristics.